Human Evacuation Behavior in Wildfires

BIO:

Sandra is an interdisciplinary researcher working in fire safety research within Arup Fire team and is also a PhD candidate in Human Behaviour and Urban Wildfire Evacuation in Fire Safety Engineering Group (FSEG) at the University of Greenwich. She has also studied Political Science (BA) and International Communications and Development (MA). Sandra has extensive experience in designing research studies and fulfilling timely projects that cover a wide range of social issues. During her BA studies in Political Science Sandra looked at migrants' barriers to double citizenship in Lithuania. She later investigated the role of social media in disaster response in the Philippines. Her latest academic project investigates human behaviour, risk perception and safety culture differences in wildfire responses in Australia and South of France.
